

I am opposed to losing my choice in an internet provider. I know from painful experience that the largest telephone providers are neither diciplined or capable in the role of an ISP. I would hate to have them lose competition and therefore add a lack of motivation to improve to the list of their current incompetencies. I support full choice and full competition in this arena and believe this proposal will also be inertial to meeting further development needs of the internet at large.